Real data is high dimensional and multi variate. A naive application of optimization techniques leads to rather poor performance, due to large memory footprint, latency and network cost. In this talk I will address how to overcome these constraints by design that takes advantage of distributional properties of real data for recommendation, classification and modeling.